

Latino/Hispanic 101:

Overcoming Barriers and Increasing Understanding

Satellite Conference Wednesday, May 12, 2004 2:00-4:00 p.m. (Central Time)

The South is now home to one-third of all Latinos and Hispanics who live in the United States. In Alabama, this population has increased by nearly 13% during the past year and these latest figures are likely understated because of what many believe to be a vast undercount of Spanish-speaking people during census counting activities. This population growth is being bolstered by thousands of immigrant women in their childbearing years.

Alabama, like many states, has a Chamber of Commerce for Latino/Hispanic people and agencies that assist them with translation, legal representation and other services. The impact of this increase is also being felt in our health care system, social service and educational institutions. The Pew Hispanic Center/Kaiser Family Foundation 2002 National Survey reported that three out of four Hispanic adults are without health insurance. Hispanics have difficulty in accessing and utilizing our health care system because of barriers such as language, inability to obtain or afford health insurance, low income and very little knowledge of how our health system works.

This program will address some of the basic differences between the American and the Latino/Hispanic cultures, health beliefs and practices, as well as some of the health and social problems prevalent in this population.
